What Is RingMaster? RingMaster is a new type of server with a database-driven web-based user interface for performing administrative tasks quickly and easily. There are no more need to teach or implement Unix commands for this purpose - all commands are accessible from the web interface. To manage users, there are Screen based access control lists, User Groups and User Permissions. RingMaster is an open source web-based user management application for Unix systems. It is written in perl and uses SQLite database for storing user information. RingMaster itself supports the following features:

The application is available at Sourceforge.

Various security vulnerabilities in RingMaster have been discovered in July 2009, reported to the author (Thamizh Viruthunthu) who assured fixing all of these flaws in time for the next stable release (2.0). In October 2010 at least two additional security issues have been discovered.

In November 2010, a critical vulnerability has been discovered in the administrative interface of the RingMaster web-server. The vulnerability allowed administrators to change the database and the administrator account name in just a few mouse clicks:

The vulnerabilities have been reported to the author who said that there was no hurry in fixing them and suggested waiting for stable production release (2.0).

A security bug in RingMaster 2.0 was discovered in April 2011: an unauthenticated user could add new administrative users or delete existing ones by accessing an URI such as <http://example.com/RingMaster/main.php?action=adduser>, where example.com is the URI of the RingMaster web-server. This bug has been reported to the author (Thamizh Viruthunthu) who said that he was not aware of it and would fix it along with all other bugs in time for stable release (2.0.1).

The first stable production version of RingMaster has been released on June 30, 2011, but no update has been announced regarding all discovered security vulnerabilities in the application. Another critical vulnerability was discovered in August 2011: an unauthenticated user could delete any user account by accessing URL such as http://example.com/RingMaster/main.php?action=deleteuser&userid=\(int\)) This vulnerability is not present in the latest development version (2.1) (accessed on September 22, 2011).
